[The treatment of severe burn from herbicide and insecticide]. In recent years, the incidence of severe burn caused by herbicide and insecticide burns has increased. This was a retrospective study on the treatment of severe burn from herbicide and insecticide, the mechanisms of injury, and the outcomes. Case series study. Retrospective study of severe burn cases in the burn center of the first hospital of Jilin University from Jan. 1995 to Dec. 2005, with a treatment scheme of early excision and fluid resuscitation. A total of 61 cases of severe burn from herbicide and insecticide (mean total burn area 46.0% TBSA, and 32.8% of burn area in a single area) were studied. The mean age of the patients was 34 years, and males accounted for 88.7%. The wounds were primarily located on the hand, extremities and foot, and the body was mostly exposed to wind-blown herbicide and insecticide. The mechanism of injury was primarily compression-induced local burn (56.6%), followed by thermal burn (23.0%), and chemical burn (10.4%). The overall mortality rate was 22.0% (13/61). Patients who could not be rescued within 24 hours had a significantly lower survival rate than those rescued after 24 hours (12.5% vs. 66.7%, $P=0.01$). Wound healing time was significantly shortened by early excision of the burned area ($P=0.03$), and the mortality rate of patients with early excision of the burned area was higher than that of those without early excision (43.8% vs. 0%, $P=0.02$). The mortality rate of patients with burns caused by exposure to herbicide and insecticide was significantly higher than that in patients with burns from other causes (43.8% vs. 3.6%, $P=0.003$), but there was no difference in survival rate between the 2 groups. The mortality rate of patients with burns complicated by inhalation injury was higher than that of those without (53.8% vs. 7.1%, $P=0.001$) but the survival rate of patients with inhalation injury was higher than that of those without (78.3% vs. 0%, $P=0.001$). There were no difference in the survival rate and mortality rate of patients with different ages and types of injury. The relationship between mortality and burn area was explored. The mortality rate of patients with burns not exceeding 20%

The Zoom Tool. This tool is found on the main toolbar and allows you to change the size of an image in the workspace. You can zoom in or out, alter the image size for printing, or show a magnified portion of the image. The Pen Tool. The Pen Tool is a special tool in Photoshop. It allows you to draw, paint and erase paths, both rasterized and vector-based, with a variable size and the ability to repeat. These tools allow you to draw inside an image or a shape and apply various effects to an image or shape. What is a Layer? A layer is a collection of elements. Layers are often referred to as the above the layer or below the layer. There are five types of layers; they are typically found on top or below the document. The above-the-layers are called background layers. They are visible by default when you open a document and are usually visible in any workspace. Layers are also sometimes referred to as strokes. The below-the-layer are called foreground layers. They are invisible by default, but can be made visible by using the Insert Layer command. These are the layers that you create. Layers are often referred to as masks. This is because they mask the contents of the layer or the underlying layer. What are Selection Modes? Selections is a way to determine what objects or areas of an image you want to apply edits to. You can either create your selection manually by using the selection tools or use the Selection Rectangle tool. There are three selection modes; they are shown in Figure 1. They are Normal mode: This is the default selection mode and allows you to select items or areas in the image. You can activate and deactivate this mode. All-Selected mode: If you select an item or area in this mode, all objects in the image are selected. This means that the object will be selected or locked. The Selection Border shown in Figure 2 will be visible. This will allow you to see which objects are selected. Partial-Selected mode: If you select a partial area of an image, only that area will be selected. If this mode is activated and you select an object or area, the rest of the image will be grayed out. The Selection Border shown in Figure 3 will be visible, showing the partial selection. Figure 1 Figure 2
